

PULSE EDITORIAL

A live-news identity for Fracture: bright, fast, credible, and kinetic without borrowing the visual language of artificial intelligence products.

POSITIONING

The Site Feels Alive Before It Explains Itself

Pulse Editorial makes Fracture feel like a modern newsroom product: immediate, scannable, and decisive. The brand should suggest movement through live status, timestamp rhythm, active rails, and sharp editorial hierarchy.

VOICE

Direct	Short, useful, confident labels.
Current	Language should imply freshness without hype.
Editorial	Headlines carry judgment and structure.
Precise	Metadata is compact and never decorative filler.

DO

Use live cues, status signals, clear section rhythm, and bold horizontal flow.

DON'T

No AI sparkles.
No chatbot-first layout.
No soft glass panels.
No vague tech optimism.

HOMEPAGE SOURCE OF TRUTH

Bright Broadcast Dashboard

The Pulse homepage is a white editorial surface with a heavy masthead, red live blocks, crisp tab rhythm, one dominant black lead module, a right live-update rail, and horizontal timeline mechanics.

COMPONENT RULES Keep modules rectilinear, compact, and scan-first. Use photos for news signal, mono timestamps for live mechanics, and orange only for active urgency.

DYNAMIC BEHAVIOR

Motion Should Prove Freshness

Pulse Editorial motion is functional: it marks new information, confirms interaction, and helps people understand update order. It should never feel like ambience.

- Live dot Subtle 1.8s opacity pulse; no glow halo.
- Story hover Image crop shifts 2-4%; headline underline draws left to right.
- Feed update New item slides in 8px, settles in 180ms.
- Counters Digits tick vertically, not with bouncy easing.
- Tabs Active rail moves horizontally under label.

MARKETING USE

Make the Product Look Like It Is Updating Right Now.

Hero, ads, launch graphics, and social cards should use actual interface fragments: live strips, headline stacks, update counters, and editorial modules. The product is the visual asset.
